This book had a lot of buzz in various magazines I read so I decided to go ahead and make the purchase as the premise: Clean diet, workouts that require no additional equipment and a section on a mind / body connection sounded a pretty good mix to me. The book is based on the fact of indeed keeping it simple and real; as the introduction states - most of us do not have time to spend hours upon hours at the gym, do not want to starve ourselves and are not really down with drinking "oddball" potions to keep in shape! The title is derived from the fact that the exercises are stacked into 30 second intervals, basically using a high intensity platform. It begins with the workouts, aka "Train Dirty"; and opens with a before and after picture of a woman who has completed that challenge. I liked the fact that this was very realistic - as though she has indeed dropped weight and gained shape, she has not gained a 6 pack and become a size zero as you might see in one of those fitness magazine ads! This is an attainable image for a reader. Then we go into a backgrounder of the exercise style which explains that these exercises are effective as they employ compound movements - that is multiple muscle groups are used at this same time making them more effective with both results and cutting time. The author suggests you might want to take before pictures and measurements and provides a tracker for readers. Then we launch into a fit test, with a tracker that employs 6 different exercises ranging from Tuck jumps to Standing Mountain Climbers. Each movement is accompanied by detailed pictures, descriptions and modifications. They are basic but certainly work you out, without the need for any contraptions or gadgets.
